How to Use This Book

Welcome. Every recipe here is engineered around one simple promise — about 70 g of protein per serving with very low sugar — so you can hit serious protein goals without counting all day. Here's how to get the most from it.

The 70 g rule

Each recipe makes one serving delivering roughly 70 g of protein (target 68–72 g) while keeping net carbs low — usually under 20 g. The portions are sized to get you there, so you don't have to do the math.

Reading a recipe

Under each title you'll see the time and a macro strip: protein, net carbs, fat, fiber and calories. Net carbs = total carbs minus fiber — the number that actually affects blood sugar.

Scaling to you

70 g per meal is a high, per-main-meal target. If you're smaller or less active, eat a portion of a serving; if you're bigger or training hard, add a snack. The companion web app can scale every recipe to your bodyweight automatically.

Make it yours

Most recipes include a “Make it...” line with dairy-free, nut-free or soy-free swaps so you can adapt them to your needs without losing the protein.

Plan your week

Use the ready-made 7-Day Meal Plans near the back, or mix and match. Aim to spread protein across the day rather than loading it all into one meal.

About the numbers

Macros are realistic estimates based on standard food-composition values; they'll vary a little with brand, cut and cooking method. Treat them as a close guide, not a lab assay.

This book is educational, not medical advice. If you have a medical condition (including kidney disease), are pregnant, or take medication, talk to your doctor or a registered dietitian before starting a high-protein diet.

Why This Works

This cookbook is built on one rule — 70 g of protein and low sugar per meal — but that rule isn't arbitrary. It comes from a fairly consistent body of nutrition and longevity research on protein, muscle, metabolic health, and healthy aging. Here's the evidence, in plain language, with sources you can check.

1. Protein is the macronutrient most of us under-eat

The official RDA for protein is 0.8 g per kg of body weight per day — but that's the amount set to prevent deficiency in the average sedentary person, not the amount that optimizes muscle, strength, body composition, or healthy aging.¹

The largest meta-analysis on the topic (Morton et al., 49 studies, 1,863 people) found that protein intakes up to ~1.6 g/kg/day produced progressively greater gains in lean mass with resistance training, with some individuals benefiting up to ~2.2 g/kg/day. For a 70 kg adult that's roughly 112–154 g of protein per day.²

Spread across three main meals, that lands right around 50–70 g per meal — which is exactly what these recipes deliver. Importantly, the same research shows that evenly distributing protein across the day beats back-loading it all at dinner.²⁴

2. Each meal needs enough protein to actually trigger muscle building

Muscle protein synthesis (MPS) — the process that maintains and builds muscle — works like a pulse, not a steady drip. A meal raises it for ~2–3 hours, then it fades even if amino acids are still in the blood. To get a strong pulse, a meal needs to clear a 'leucine threshold' of roughly 2–3 g of leucine, which corresponds to about 0.4 g of protein per kg of body weight in a single sitting.³⁴

For a larger or older adult, ~0.4 g/kg can mean 30–40 g of protein per meal just to maximize the response — and older muscle is 'anabolically resistant,' meaning it needs even more protein per meal than young muscle to get the same effect. A 70 g protein meal comfortably clears that threshold for almost everyone.³⁵

3. Protein, muscle, and longevity (with the nuance)

After about age 30 we lose muscle steadily — a process called sarcopenia — and low muscle mass in older age predicts frailty, falls, loss of independence, and higher mortality. Expert groups (PROT-AGE, ESPEN) now recommend older adults eat 1.0–1.2 g/kg/day, and 1.2–1.5 g/kg or more if they're ill or have sarcopenia — well above the standard RDA.⁵⁶

There's a genuine scientific debate worth being honest about: in middle age (50–65), one influential study (Levine/Longo) linked very high animal-protein intake to higher mortality, via growth pathways like IGF-1 and mTOR — but in the same study, adults over 65 with higher protein intake had LOWER mortality. The harms were also attenuated when protein came from plant sources.⁷

150 g (5¼ oz) Lean turkey breakfast sausage

40 g (1½ oz) Feta cheese

60 g (2 oz) Baby spinach

1 tsp (5 ml) Olive oil

to taste Salt & black pepper

METHOD

1. Brown the turkey sausage in a non-stick skillet over medium heat, breaking it up, 4-5 min. Push to one side.
2. Add olive oil and the spinach; wilt for 30 seconds.
3. Whisk the whole eggs into the egg whites, season, and pour into the pan.
4. Stir gently until just set, fold in the crumbled feta, and serve hot.

Tip. Egg whites carry the protein with almost no fat; the 2 whole eggs add flavor and choline. Swap feta for goat cheese to vary it.

120 g (4¼ oz) Crushed tomatoes

80 g (2¾ oz) Bell pepper & onion

1 tbsp (15 ml) Chili powder, cumin, garlic, salt

1 tsp (5 ml) Olive oil

METHOD

1. Brown the beef with diced pepper and onion in olive oil.
2. Stir in the spices, crushed tomatoes and black soybeans.
3. Simmer 25-30 min until thick; adjust seasoning.

Tip. Black soybeans give the look and bite of chili beans with a fraction of the carbs of kidney beans. Doubles well for the freezer.

METHOD

1. Whip the Greek yogurt with whey, PB powder and cocoa until thick and smooth.
2. Sweeten to taste and chill 10 minutes for a mousse texture.

Tip. A dessert that's secretly 70 g protein and almost no fat. Add a few berries on top if you have carb room.*

Make it...

Dairy-free: Plain 0% Greek yogurt → unsweetened coconut or soy yogurt · Chocolate whey protein powder → pea or other plant protein powder

Nut-free: Powdered peanut butter (PB2) → sunflower-seed butter (e.g. SunButter)
